Another Minority Gov't For Ontario Tories

94th YEAR, No. 2

TORONTO — Ontario gave Premier William Davis' Progressive Conservative govty for the second time in 21

The result puts Davis' leadership on the line.

The 47-year-old premier, who had asked for a mandate to speak for the province in the continuing debate on na-tional unity, said he accepted the election verdict with "hu-mility and gratitude."

Unofficial results with all but two of the 125 rdings polled gave the PCs 58 seats five short of the 63 needed for a majority.

The Liberals appeared to have supplanted the New Democratic Party as official opposition, to the government by winning 24 seats, one more than the NDP.

than the NDP.

Conservatives made gains in northern ontain, where they picked up three seats at the expense of the NDP, and west Toronto, where they captured two more formerly NDP hold ridings.

Results were very tight in some ridings and recounts are likely.

At dissolution the Liberals-held 35 seats and the NDP 38.
Davis called the election April 29 on the basis of public opinion polls which showed Liberal support to be unusually low.

His failure to get a majority for the second time is certain to bring pressures in the Conservative party for his replacement before another

The election was widely resented by voters as unnecessary and this was probably the major reason for the minority verdict.

Davis called it after losing a relatively minor vote in the legislature and the electorate was not prepared to accept his claim that minority gov-ernment was suddenly no longer working.

All three opposition leaders praised the move (though NDP poration will operate independently. eader Dave Barrett grumped that Social Credit was just copying NDP economic plans), Scott Wallace and Gordon Gibson being almost effusive.

At the corporation's birth announcement, with so few details available about the new beast or the personalities who will be in charge, few of us should carp at what is basically a good idea. When more specific information is known concerning the price of shares to be issued by the corporation, how many the government will retain, who will be hired to run it, what the legislation will direct the company to do, there will be time enough to take a more critical look.

The new corporation is to be given the government's holdings in Canadian Cellulose Ltd. (82 per cent of shares in the lumber and pulp concern), Westcoast Transmission Ltd. (10.7 per cent of shares in the gas pipeline company), Plateau mills Ltd. and Kootenay Forest Products Ltd. (wholly-owned sawmill and plywood

Bennett credits the Alberta Energy Corp., an Alberta government creation, as the model for the B.C. venture, but there are some crucial differences. About the only similarity is that provincial residents can buy shares. The AEC, as its name implies, channels Albertans' savings into development of the province's oil and gas. It was the vehicle for Alberta's participation in the Syncrude tar sands project, for exam-

No one but the premier knows for sure, but it seems that the B.C. corporation's thrust will not be so narrow. Bennett mentioned investment in a new pulp mill or development of B.C.'s coal reserves as a possibility.

While most people who have extra savings and usually buy Canada savings bonds or hold a few B.C. parity bonds will welcome the chance to invest more directly in the development of their province, we hope establishment of the new corporation does not signal the start of the "fire sale" of Shares will be issued by the cor- crown corporations feared when Acts.

Social Credit has made no hasty or rash decisions in this regard. The companies acquired by the former administration have been allowed to operate much as before. But this new corporation is inevitably going to mean radical change.

One immediate disadvantage involved in selling KFP and Plateau Mills to this new agency will be the loss of their income tax-exempt status. Now, since more than 90 per cent of their shares are owned by the province, they pay no federal income taxes. Under the new arrangement they will become companies like any other. The other two firms will not be affected, since the government owns fewer than 90 per cent of the shares

This is an important consideration for a company like KFP, which was only marginally profitable when it was bought for $7 million several

With these caveats still to be taken care of by the legislation the Times nonetheless supports the philosophy behind the proposal. It is a sensible and useful idea which could do more to buy back British Columbia from the multinational corporations than a hundred Foreign Investment Review

The New Stream Keepers

"... I do not tolerate ripples ..."

VANCOUVER — Among the tribes of the Pacific Coast, from the Tsimishian in the north to the Yoruk in California, the most honored post was that of Keeper of the Streams. Each Spring, the Keeper welcomed back the salmon with prayers and ceremonies, made certain no one threw refuse into the streams (under pain of death among the Bella Coolas), and en-forced the taboos, such as returning the skeletons, and therefore the souls, of the salmon to the waters from which they had

The Keepers are long gone. Today's ethic in British Columbia is development. combined together, urbanization, pollution, logging, hydro projects dustrialization and construction (almost three-quarters of the marshes in Vancouver's Delta where salmon feed on phyto-plankton, have been built over) have cut the annual surge of salmon to the province's 1,600 streams and inland lakes o less than one-half its volume at the turn of the century.

ritating drive to Quesnel during the Our salmon are poised between survival and extinction," says Ron MacLeod Almost shyly, he adds, "The ethic we're summer, but to find a lasting solution. vou're going to have to slow down and going to need is for everyone to become a Keeper of the Streams."

MacLeod's formal title is Project Director of Salmonid Enhancement. Aged 53. he's a senior fisheries department official, himself the son of a fisheries officer and born in Tofino which is as far west as ocean. Among his colleagues, and among British Columbia fishermen, MacLeod is coast fisheries officers who make you realize, with a twinge of guilt, that all civil servants these days are not also bureaucrats, have a chance to be Keepers of 'the Streams and the chance therefore not just to save the salmon from extinction but to return them to plentitude.

'Our objective.' said Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc at a press conference in Vancouver last week, "is to double, to more than double, today's catch of 145 million pounds to 335 million

To achieve that goal, LeBlanc then announced the largest fisheries enhancement — or restoration — program attempted by any country in the world.

Over the next five years, MacLeod and his task force of officials will spend $150 million on hatcheries, rearing ponds fishways, artificial spawning channels stream clearing and on fertilization of in-land lakes (the nutrients are sprayed into the lakes by water-bomber planes). Over the succeeding 10 years, they will spend another $300-$600 million, both bo build new structures and to operate the existing projects.

The enhancement concept itself is sim ple. Nature designed the salmonid five species of salmon, chinook, sockeye, coho, chum and pink, and the two of searun trout, steelhead and cutthroat for aquaculture. Born in inland fresh waters, the salmonid return, after a cycle of from two to seven years and after travels of 10,000 miles and more in the "ocean pastures" south of Alaska, to spawn again in the same gravel bed where

What you sow, you reap — in abundance (one and one-half million salmon spawn in a single, 300-yard-long gravel strip of the Adams River), and in value (chinook now fetch, fresh, $4.50 a pound). Today, the purse seiners and trollers and gill-netters pull in $200 million worth of salmon: their haul, once the enhancement program is complete, will be worth at least double that

In its details, salmonid enhancement is anything but simple. The restoration of differing species has to be phased to their differing life-cycles (shortest for pinks. longest for chinook). Until an agreement negotiated, Alaskan fisherman may catch much of the increased Canadian stocks. The needs of British Columbia's half-million sports fishermen will have to be traded-off against those of the province's 8,500 commercial fishermen.

People Decide

The hard trade-offs will be between enhancement and development. A stream enhanced with hatcheries and rearing ponds and fishways means a stream lost to hydro power or to logging, or, at Kitimat, to a proposed oil terminal.

"It's the people who are going to decide how many fish we're going to have." says MacLeod. The projects he likes to talk about are those like the tagging of the coho in Hidden Lake, Yukon, by the children of the Whitehorse elementary school or the clearing of Morrison Creek on Vanc Island by volunteer labour of the local fish and game club. They, and the teachers of the Stalo Sitel tribe who have invented a "fish game" for the children, have made the decision that counts Keepers of the Streams.

North Needs Jobs

As a resident of the Northwest Ter-ritories. I am dismaved by the efforts of well-intentioned southerners to stop development in the north. In many cases people from these so called "support" groups have never seen the north. They have no idea of the situation here and they tend to view the communities of the western Arctic and the Mackenzie Valley as an idealized paradise where native peo-ple live in harmony with nature, content to follow the life style of their ancestors.

This is definitely not the case. The native people like the people of the south, want and enjoy conveniences such as houses. central heating, electricity, etc. Also, like people in the south, native people want

Take the example of my home town. the village of Fort Simpson. In this predominantly native community of 1,000 people, nearly half the work force is ununemployed. And the prospects of wage employment are very poor.

Three or four years ago the Fort Simpson scene was different. Development prospects were good. Men were at work constructing winter roads into exploration sites Local building construction tion programs were underway. Hire North. a government training program, employed a substantial number of men at its road building operation north of Fort Simpson And barge traffic on the river was up

People want to make their own decisions about the future. They want the option of joining a wage economy or going back to hunting and trapping. Some want to combine the two.

The average subsidy by the government of Canada to every resident of the N.W.T. is now approximately $8,000 per year, far above the average subsidy provided to even the poorest province. This subsidy must increase if a Mackenzie Valley pipeline is not built.

A pipeline will offer jobs directly and indirectly to the people of Fort Simpson. and to the people of other Mackenzie Vallev and delta communities. I would like to ask southern Canadians who are promoting a 10-year development freeze in the north to stop and consider the emptiness of those years. The emptiness for adults who want wage employment and are not prepared to return to the land on a tull time basis. The emptiness for the young people coming into the work force expecting to use the skills they have learned. The emptiness and disillusionment of a people who know they are surviving on "make work" projects supported by the government

Joseph says the cars of the future will be equipped with radars the size of headlights to sense oncoming cars. They'll also have computers to sense road conditions, car speeds and driver response, all of which will be calculated quickly to steer the car out of the way of an impending collision

"We'll make the system redundant so it will be fail-safe," Joseph said. "When that happens, drivers will no longer be sued if they have collisions. Whoever makes and supplies the system gets sued, just like the people who supply pacemakers that fail' to, regulate the human heartbeat.

Behind all this change is the fact that computers are shrinking in size and cost at a speed unmatched in their 25-year

Stolid Bureaucrat Tightens Soviet Control

BREZHNEV . . . reaches peak at 70

MOSCOW — Since the Soviet Union came into existence 60 years ago, only four men have sat at the pinnacle of power, and each has set his own distinct mark on the country's foreign and domestic policies. Lenin was a revolutionary Stalin was a tyrant. Khrushchev was an erratic gambler. Leonid Brezhnev is a stolid bureaucrat devoted to caution, patience and firmness.

Brezhnev's authority, accumulated gradually over the 13 years since Khrushchev's ter, is now being enhanced even further. With the removal last month of President Nikolai Podgorny from the 15-man ruling Politburo, evidence has in-creased that Brezhnev will add Podgorny's official role as head-of-state to his present post as head of the Communist

Since the party has always run the Soviet Union, the extra post would seem to have little practical significance, but it does suggest that Brezhnev has consolidated power and dominates decision-making even more thoroughly than before. The process of developing policy may remain somewhat collegial, as Soviet officials are wont to tell their Western acquaintances, but Brezhnev, now 70, has proved himself a master politician in the uniquely Soviet mold: with an acute instinct for selfpreservation and a flair for eliminating potential rivals. Until either his health or his political strength fails, he will be shaping Soviet attitudes toward detente with the United States, toward internal dissent and toward the economic difficulties of his own country.

The Brezhnev era has been characterized by simultaneous efforts to reduce tension with the West and increase control of ideas at home. The Soviet Union has tried to wear the mantle of moderation in the international arena, even in the context of supporting anti-colonialist and revolutionary surrogates in developing countries. Its interests have become far-flung, its influence worldwide. It has increased its stake in stability and has made the striving for nuclear arms its relations with Washington.

At the same time, Brezhnev has tried to impose tougher internal order, reversing some of the liberalizing, intellectual and political tendencies of Khrushchev. A beneficiary of the Stalinist purges, the young Brezhnev moved steadily up through the ranks of the Ukrainian party apparatus in 1937 and 1938 as space was made by the expulsion, imprisonment or execution of others. As the local party structure was dismantled and rebuilt. Brezhnev become deputy of Dneprodzerzhinsk, then head of a department in the Dneprodzerzhinsk provincial committee, then a secretary of the committee, all within two some of the leadership, including Podgorny, endorsed Khrushchev's call to punish several officials associated with Stalin, Brezhnev belonged to a group that stopped short of this line. After Khrushchev was ousted, he realized, through conviction or oppor tunism, that the forces of "destalinization" were spent and a modicum of "restalinization" provided a means to power.

Attitudes toward Stalinism involve much more than esoteric questions about whether Stalin's picture should appear in schoolbooks. They bear directly on the degree of freedom that Soviet -citizens are permitted today, and many intellectuals now sense a tightening, a growing pressure against artistic and political expression that deviates from the party view. While Brezhnev is no Stalin, his toughening stand on dissent has reinforced the notion that he has positioned himself just to the spectrum, eschewing mass terror and tolerating some pluralism, but at the same time giving the Soviet secret police greater latitude to arrest and harass dissidents.

It would be a mistake to see Brezhnev's hand in every political arrest and trial, for the Soviet bureaucracy is complex and full of competing in-terests and impulses. But he sets the basic course, and that course has been fairly constant since the Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968, when Russian tanks and troops crushed the liberal regime of Alexander Dubcek, destroying what many Russian intellectuals saw as a possible model for their own country's move toward freedom.

If the message of the invasion was meant as much for Soviet citizens as for Czechoslovaks, a clear warning of what the Kremlin would not tolerate, it contained a valuable insight into frontation. As drastic as the in-right of centre in the Soviet vasion was, it was not under taken until Moscow was cer-tain that the Czechoslovaks would offer no significant armed resistance. Brezhnev likes a sure bet, and his foreign policy reflects this affinity for highly favorable odds. When for example, he supplied North Vietnam with weapons, he accompanied the arms with private requests for restraint thereby appearing more moderate than China while still assuring that the Soviet Union would be on the side of the ultimate victors.

When the Soviet Union dispatched weapons and Cuban troops to Angola last year, it made brilliant use of the United States post-Vietnam wariness of military entangle ments in faraway, developing nations. But there has been no action under the Brezhnev regime to date to match the rashness of Khrushchev's missile installations in Cuba, and such big gambles are not likely to find favor in the Kremlin as long as the current leadership remains in power

Chance to Go Fishing

BOLIVAR, Tenn. - Not very long ago. a fact as old as the Industrial Revolution was rediscovered: that industrial workers are not necessarily or even normally happy doing work that's dull and repetitive that this is so even where wages and working conditons accord with prevailing standards of what's decent. Serious mer then gave serious thought to the problem and some new pieces of jargon were coined for use at the seminars and con-ferences that serious men attend. "Work enrichment" was one; "work humanization," another. These had vaguely to do with the notion that there was something called "job satisfaction" that couldn't be guaranteed in labor contracts. So a no question was raised: Could work itself as distinct from its output and rewards be made better?

It's a question worth considering sooner or later, those who consider if find themselves receiving directions to this town in southwestern Tennessee, a short drive from the Mississippi border. Bolivar is an unlikely Mecca: a small semirural community in an underpopulated pocket of the state that's normally described as backward. Industry came here to escape unionization, not to evolve new standards for the good life in an industrial society But happenstance intervened: The U.A.W. managed to organize a plant that manufac tures most of the rear-view mirrors that get mounted on the doors of American automobiles. That plant was then taken over by an entrepreneur named Sidney Harman who speculated in social philosophy as a well as stocks. Harman, who has since moved to Washington as Under Secretary of Commerce, entered into a joint venture with the union to see if work could be made better — whatever that proved to mean — for the employees of Harman International Industries.

Unexpected Twist

The initiators of the experiment talked of establishing a model of industrial democracy, of involving workers in the decisions on organization and production that shape their working lives. Workers, it was thought, might end up redesigning their jobs or rotating their tasks; they might have a say in the selection of the machinery they worked on. The important point, the initiators felt, was to make sure they got what they wanted, not what someone else thought they should want. As a reformed China-watcher, I'm tempted to that the initiators-were following the Maoist maxim of "from the masses, to the masses." But what came from the masses here was an idea that put an unexpected twist on the concept of "work im-provement." Formerly it came to be known as "earned idle time." Put baldly as a principle, it's this: The less work By JOSEPH LELYVELD New York Times

That may seem one of the least stunning discoveries of our time, but it's best not to rush to conclusions. The truth is that the idea of humanizing industrial labor is about as hard for most people to grasp as it is unexceptionable. It hints at the notion that a workplace that was designed as a profit-maximizing machine can be reorganized as a community. Wellconditioned, made-in-America mental equipment often seizes up at the thought "What's the gimmick?" it protests. "What community?" Bolivar's answer has emerged in slow stages and only partially because, it seems, no one's really sure.

Work Divided Fairly

Earned time — which means that workers can go home whenever they've fulfilled the production quota set for the full working day - bloomed spontaneously in the polish and buff department when "work improvement" was brand-new. Having complained that work was often divided unevenly, the polishers went on to suggest that they could divide it more fairly among themselves if they worked as autonomous teams. Working as individuals, they had resisted work norms set by the industrial engineers who clocked them at their tasks. Working cooperatively, they expected to overfulfill those quotas. But "work improvement" was supposed to enhance lives, not production If it wasn't to seem a managen trick, a way had to be found for workers to benefit from overproduction. Money out: That smacked of an incentive which the union opposed because it would tend to reduce the number of jobs at a time of high unemployment. The obvious alternative to money was time.

So, despite the misgivings of both management and the union, the polishers were allowed to leave their jobs two, three and even four hours before the end of their shifts and still be paid for eight. Neither production nor quality could be shown to have suffered; if anything, production improved. Soon the other departments at Harman International Industries were clamoring to go the way of polish and buff. By now, nearly all of them have.

As a result, new problems have replaced old ones: Workers sometimes resist work that's hard to finish early sometimes also they are rough on peers who don't seem to be working fast enough. A problem that hangs in the air is the effect of earned time on the original idea of work improvement," which has been shunted aside, if not derailed, in the daily rush to leave. No one can say the popular was a prime aim of the scheme, no one can say it has been a failure. But a vague sense of letdown persists, as if some greater transformation might have been expected after all the effort to achieve a climate of trust and common purpose. "As of now, the peoples is just satisfied with going home," said Earl Bowers, a polisher, who was echoed by John Lyle, a vice president. "I'm not sure what people want out of life except to get the hell out of the plant. Lyle said. So much provement" in Bolivar? Not exactly. A few of the original experiments in factory floor democracy have become routine. In polish and buff for instance, the workers now have a say in setting production standards. About one-third of the workers have availed themselves of courses now offered in the factory itself; these have ranged from ceramics and guitar playing to blueprint reading and black studies. A "working committee" of top management and un ion members meets weekly, not to hear grievances but to consider what amounts to the pursuit of happiness in Bolivar. Beyond these tangible gains are the intangible: the increase in trust and, I can't help thinking, the disappointment that more hasn't happened. That disappointment means the idea that more is possible has taken hold. It's the question of "what people want out of life" that remains to be

GoalsToo Narrow?

The mixed results of the Bolivar pro ject suggest that this question can't be fully answered for most people on a factory floor. The workers who leave here early on earned time have destinations. They fish. They work in their vegetable gardens. They spend time with their children. They tinker with their cars. They have purposes of their own. Maybe "work enrichment and "work humanization" are too narrow

But that too is only speculation. Our relative simple-mindedness when it comes to these questions is extraordinary, especially when compared with the runaway complexity of a business like Harman Industries - dozens of operations going into the production of dozens of models of what after all, a relatively simple object. It's not enough for a mirror to reflect an image anymore; it must now operate by remote control, adjust itself to the light and, sometimes, it must even tell the temperature. The genius of industry has been to reduce the work experience to a set of repetitive tasks while endlessly elaborating the products of that work to the point of decadence. Given paradox, going home early to fish is a triumph of humanization.

A new Westcoast Savings building to serve the Esquimalt area.

THE MUNICIPALITY OF ESQUIMALT

The word Esquimalt is an Indian one, meaning "place of shoaling waters." This 1,500-acre municipality was incorporated in 1912, but it had the first free public school in B.C. as early as 1863. Today, it is a bustling municipality of 15,000 people, and Westcoast Savings is proud to be a part of it!

The following companies congratulate Westcoast Savings on their new building, and thank them for allowing them to play their parts in creating this efficient and beautiful building.

Western and midwestern governors indicated strong oppositin to a Trans-Canada oil pipeline during a one-day conference April 24.

Most of the governors in-dicated support for a northern tier pipeline proposal which would carry Alaska oil from Washington state across the northern portion of the U.S. They were wary of a proposal to ship Alaska oil from Washington state through an exist-ing Canadian pipeline.

Washington Governor Dixy Lee Ray has indicated she likes a plan by El Paso Alaska Co. for an all-Alaska natural gas pipeline from Prudhoe Bay to Alaska's south coast. The gas would be shipped to California by tankers.

An Alcan Pipeline Co. natu-

'Naturally, if you're the proponent of a particular proposal, for instance, El Paso, you're going to advance your case as best you can," Warren said.

'But when it's all over and done, I don't think you'll hear anything about the reliability of Canada as a place where a pipeline should run." Warren said the Canadian government has not fully de-lined its views on increased oil tanker traffic or the establishment of an oil trans-shipment terminal in western Washington inland waters.

He said Canada is very conscious of environmental dangers and would prefer that whatever arrangements are made are the least dangerous

A Seattle City Light proposto raise the level of Ross erating capabilities also is of great concern to Canadians, Warren said.

Times Ottawa Bureau
OTTAWA — For the first time in many months a glimmer of new hope and increasleading business exe made public Thursday.

It could be a spillover of the mounting confidence in the American economy that has been reported in surveys

The more confident mood in Canada was revealed in the results of a survey of senior year of business attitudes and investment spending. A new upswing in inflationary expectations among Canadian businessmen was also detected, which the board pointed out could lead to a new upward pressure on

The results of the survey pointed to a continuing con-cern on the part of business-men over the short-term out-

As in the first quarter survey this year a majority of the businessmen contacted said they anticipated no nies made by the Conference Board of Canada. It was its second quarterly survey this change in the overall economic conditions in Canada over the next six months. The responses to the current survey appeared to be more optimis-tic than were those in the survey conducted last January, said the board. Over 21 per cent of the respondents expect economic conditions to improve over the next six months compared to in over-all economic condi-tions fell to 14 per cent from 26 per cent in the previous

The principal concern of senior executives continues to be the weak demand conditions in the Canadian economy and the resulting idle equipment which continues to be widespread. As in the previous survey the respondents generally did not consider the present a good time to under-take investment expenditures to expand productive capacity. Actual investment spending intentions reported in the respending on plant and equiptimistic than earlier concern-ing the financial position of the corporate sector.

The business executives also appeared somewhat less unhappy with the current economic policy environment than they were three months

The percentage of survey participants who were dissa-tisfied with the federal government's record in managing the offsetting increase oc-curred in the proportion of respondents who rated the government's performance as

Few Specifics In Japan Talks

TOKYO (AP) - The first and this year is the 100th anmeeting of the Japan-Canada joint economic committee, opening in Vancouver next week, will be a forum to dis-cuss policies rather than a site for specific objectives, Japanese officials said Friday. Japanese Foreign Minister

Iichiro Hatoyama and his Ca-nadian counterpart Don Ja-mieson will attend a half-day preliminary session June 13, and then go into private discussions on other matters while the meeting works in

"It is significant for us that the meeting is in Vancouver," a foreign ministry spokesman said, "because for Canada it niversary of the first Japa-nese immigrants entering Canada." The meeting is called for in a framework for economic co-operation signed by Prime Minister Trudeau and former "We do not expect to make any specific conclusions at the meeting, but to arrive at concrete policies," said the spokesman, Hiroshi Fukuda, director of the second North American affairs division.

Japan and Canada have been trying to reach an agreeof a safeguard agreement to ensure the nuclear material would not be used for exploin Ottawa in May and the foreign ministers are expected to go over the matter again in their separate session, the spokesman said.

The joint economic committee will discuss the organization and topics of a future summit meeting, multilateral trade negotiations, the recent conference on international economic co-operation in Paris, bilateral trade and energy matters, and the eco-nomic situation of the two countries.

Pilot Talks Block Broken

MONTREAL (CP) - Negotiators for Air Canada and its 1500 pilots broke a major deadlock late Thursday which had threatened to scuttle cor tract talks and bring the pilots closer to strike action. *Sources on both sides said pilot demands for improved work scheduling will be re-ferred to a special joint com-mittee which will negotiate specific scheduling modifications while a new contract is Negotiations between Air Canada and the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association (CALPA) were to continue today with optimism apparently running high that a settlement may be in sight. The pilots have been without contract since last Dec. 1.

The scheduling stalemate had stalled negotiations for three days. The talks are being directed by William Kelly, about the second of the secon Kelly, assistant deputy labor minister

*The federal mediator convened the two parties for spe-cial negotiations in Ottawa last week after conciliation efforts fell apart last month. The talks recessed last Friday and resumed here Tuesday.

Earlier, a source close to the talks said the labor deindicated earlier this week it will not appoint a should these talks fail.

That, theoretically, would free the pilots to strike as early as next week, although CALPA officials have yet to seek a strike mandate.

A strike over a contract would be a first for any CALPA members. However, the association's 2,700 members walked out for nine days last June to protest the federal government's bilingual air policy

The pilots have emphasized the scheduling question in the Air Canada contract talks, in part because CALPA agreed early in the talks to accept the maximum 6.12-per-cent wage increase allowed by federal anti-inflation guidelines. CALPA says crews which by short-haul routes endure-irregular breaks between flights— breaks for which they are inadequately compensated.

Neither side has discussed the negotiations publicly. Privately, they say the pilots are pushing for improved com-pensation which would en-courage Air Canada to eliminate long layovers for crews away from home awaiting Pilots receive a guaranteed minimum of paid hours while on a given work cycle, which may take them away from home for several hours or several days. The minimum is total hours spent away from home both in the air and on The run to the home base on the Fraser River in Richmond takes just three-and-a-half hours, travelling at 18 knots.

"I'm not sure how much dough I've got but it must be well over a million," he said. "I know I've got more than enough to last me until I die."

Having made enough is in facing challenges. And he admits to having taken on a big one with a restaurant on the same site where four others have folded in just under four years.

"We're going to make it,"
he says. "We always have in the past."

Constabaris started the first Mr. Mike's restaurant on Granville Street in 1960 and by 1973 there were 25.

The current total — including Mr. Mike's and Meat Market restaurants — is "about 65, the number keeps chan-

Enhancement Plan Flawed Without Added Protection

Prompt Passage of Bill C-38, a vital amendment to Canada's Fisheries Act, could form a crucial part in determining the success or failure of the joint federal-provincial salmonid enhancement program in British Columbia.

This point was exphasized Thursday in a brief delivered In Ottawa to the Commons standing committee on fisheries and forestry by the Canadian Wildlife Fedtration, a conservation organization representing some 270,000 Canadians.

Bill Otway of Vancouver, executive-director of the B.C. Wildlife Association, presented tht brief for Ed Mankelow of Chemainus, who is chairman of the CWF fishedies commit-

The federal government recently announced it would be spending $150 million over the next five years on the enhancement program.

"The expenditure of these funds without the implementa-tion of Bill C-38 in its present form would be pure folly," states the brief. "It would be a total waste of the taxpayers' hard-earned dollars.

"You cannot maintain, let alone enhance, a resource unless you can protect the resource base."

Delegates from all provinces to the recent CWF annual convention voiced overwhelming support for Bill C-38. "All indicated that their problems only differed from British Columbia's in the name and location of the stream, lake or estuary and perhaps the species of fish," states the brief.

In addition to the commercial value of the fisheries resource, the brief explained the sports fishing industry generates over $1 billion annually into the Canadian economy. In addition, the sports fishing industry employs over 100,000 people across the nation and the present value of sports fishing boats in Canada tops the $2 billion mark. boats in Canada tops the $2 billion mark.

"We state without reservation that unless C-38 is implemented without significant amendment the fishery resource will soon cease to be a viable part of the social and economic well-being of this great nation," predicts the brief.

"Primarily because of degradation of the resource base, the spawning and rearing areas, the food producing areas, in short the aquatic habitat. This degradation has taken place because the present legislation does not provide adequate

"Throughout all of this fisheries officers (what few we have) stand in abject frustration watching the resource they are charged with protecting rapidly disappear and unable to do their job and save it.'

The brief goes on to underline the fact there is no case for prosecution under the present Fisheries Act as long as the fish themselves are not directly harmed. Destruction of habitat, eggs or alevin stages of the fish are not covered under current regulations to the satisfaction of the courts — Bill C-380 would fill this loophole.

Our own Jim Nielsen and other provincial environment ministers opposed Bill C-38 at a meeting with federal fish-eries minister Romeo LeBlanc in Saskatoon last week.

Some of thest ministers might have been laboring under the assumption that their own provincial pollution control acts negate the need for a beefed-up Fisheries Act.

Unfortunately, that is not the case and the brief goes on to outline a specific case in the Supreme Court of B.C. in which the Hon. Justice Ruttan "handed down a judgment that upheld a lower court ruling that provincial pollution laws did not apply to waters under federal jurisdiction."

Certain segments of government and industry feel provisions in C-38 are too stringent and the brief states: "Considering what we have lost already and what we stand to lose, we wonder if they are stringent enough. C-38 was made necessary because those same sections of government and industry made it plain by their past actions that they will use any means possible to circumvent provisions of the present act

"Parliament in our view therefore has no choice but to ensure that the means of circumvention are minimal."

Prompt passage of Bill C-38 is in the best interests of all sports fishermen and recreationists.

So grab a pen and express some positive feelings on the subject to your MP in Ottawa.

It just might make a difference.

TEL CONTRACT ACCEPTED

VANCOUVER (CP) - The senting 9,500 British Columbia Telephone employees voted Thursday to accept a new contract under the terms recommended by federal conciliator Dr. Noel Hall but the agreement did little to smooth over relations between the union and company.

Hours after the Telecommunications Workers Union had accepted Hall's non-binding report, a few employees at B.C. Tel's Vancouver office staged a brief walkout, continuing a dispute over distribution frames that has already sparked rotating strikes throughout the province.

Hall's report, released Monday, recommended a 45-cent hourly increase over one year and said there should be no change, at this time, in the contentious contracting' - out clause.

Hall said the wage increase should be retroactive to Jan.

1. The changes recommended would be within anti-inflation guidelines. Present wage rates vary between $6.42 and $9.75 an hour.

Union leader Bob Donnelly said no general membership vote would be taken on the agreement until negotiations between B.C. Tel's two sub-sidiaries, Okanagan Tele-phone and Canadian Telebeen concluded.

Donnelly said that, "while the bargaining committee is reasonably satisfied with the report they feel that the B.C. Tel. influence in these other negotiations precludes a vote at this time."

He also called for a review of outstanding issues between the union and B.C. Tel, with the union and management involved as full partners.

Later in the day, TWU members at the downtown office demonstrated with picket signs for about 20 minutes to block a truck carrying distribution frames.

The continuing dispite centres on frames purchased from an eastern company.
The union wants the product provided by Canadian Telephone and Supplies Ltd. but the company says it's cheaper

Hogging Capital

VANCOUVER (CP) — The president of the Investment Dealers Association of Canada says the root cause of unemployment and inflation in Canada is that too much capital goes to government and Andrew Kniewasser told members of the Vancouver Stock Exchange in a speech Thursday that of the $20 billion raised in new financing in Canadian securities markets last year, 80 per cent went to governments, 27 per cent to debt for large enterprises, and only three per cent to new quity financing. new quity financing.

"This misallocation of capital . . . has been going on in Canada for years."

Kneiwasser said that Canada now is one of the most capifal intensive countries in the world and British Columbia is its most capital intensive province.

Canada needs billions in new financing each year to invest in job creating and productive facilities, the need for a strong capital market to raise this money is not suf-ficiently understood. Kniewasser said the last federal budget recognized that a turnaround in the approach to savings and invest ment was urgently required "and we are at least on the right path."

Gov'ts Crown Evidence Destroyed In CanCel Pollution Trial

Crown evidence to be used in a pollution trial against Cana-dian Cellulose Co. Ltd. has apparently been destroyed, provincial court was told Wednesday.

Keith Hebron, fisheries of-ficer for the federal Environ-mental Protection Service, testified that 30 drainage and sediment samples which had been tested for the chemical polychlorinated biphenyls (PCB) would not be produced.

Crown prosecutor Werner Heinrich said outside the court that the samples had been destroyed "as a matter of course" at the provincial analysis laboratory in Van-

Nutrition, then is important. But why a good breakfast? Southward told me that a breakfast of high protein—like meat or eggs—will carry you through the day, until.noon or so. With a breakfast of carbohydrates (or no breakfast it all) your energy will be burned out by midmorring, and you'll be feeling sluggish and headachey. So what do you do — run for that danish and coffee with extra

sassafras tea

In backwoods country, sassafras has traditionally been reserved for use as a spring tonic that "thins the blood." But many modern individuals drink the satisfying brew - in moderate quantities all year round.

Although the sassafras tree (sometimes called a shrub) is native only to the eastern half of the United States and some parts of Asia, its roots are sold throughout the world for use as tea and as a flavoring for medicines and soft drinks. In other words, if you can't find the plant growing wild in your area, it's a sure bet that grocery stores and/or health food outlets will have it.

The yellowish-green flowers of the sassafras are about a quarter inch across and bloom very early in the spring. The tree's leaves are quite unusual they may have a relatively smooth outline, a mitten shape or a trident silhouette : . often all on the Sassafras roots may be pulled from the ground at any time of the year. They're all good, but the smaller ones are the best. As long as you use some reasonable restraint, there's no need to worry about ruining a patch of the little trees by gathering their roots. The more you harvest, the more underground shoots the shrubs seem to send out.

Wash the foraged roots thoroughly and cut them into pieces a couple of inches long. Then dump a handful of the sections — fresh or dried — into a pot and boil them in water until the liquid is a satisfying red. Sweeten to taste with sugar, honey or maple syrup, and drink hot or iced.

The same roots can be used to make three or our batches of tea.

Israel Army Instructors Include Young Women

TEL AVIV — If your vison of a military drill instructor is or a military unit material is someone with a face resembling sequoia bark, a voice compounded of gravel, drag-on's breath and the lung power of King Kong and the disposition of a rabid were-wolf, think again.

In—an encampment in the Judean Hills, the Israeli Army is for the first time assigning young women, some of them just out of high school, to train its recruits.

The new breed of drill in-structor — the ranks include a former ballerina, members of kibbutzim and the daugh-ters of municipal officials and bank managers — owes its origins to a manpower shortage that led the base commander to seek a new source of talent.

The job entails rousing recruits from their barracks in the morning, whipping them into physical condition, teaching them such skills as the handling of weapons, leading them on runs and marches and seeing them back to the barracks again at night.

Despite initial opposition, the base commander says the four-month-old experiment has succeeded beyond his wildest dreams, with competition between the sexes spurring the men to perform well.

Reaction from the recruits cept for one soldier who said that taking orders from women ran against his reli-gious principles. Now plans are afoot to elevate the

"It increases the men's motivation," she added, "and mine, too."

The experiment began after Colonel Dov's request for additional male instructors was rejected by military head-quarters. But a brigadier gen-eral there called for volun-teers from a women's training base, and received a good response. All the women in the experimental program have had experience in training at

The first young women brought to Colonel Dov's base were assigned only to courses in first aid, antichemical warfare and weapons instruction.

When the new D.I.'s heard male instructors grumble that they, the men, would now have to turn out at 4:30 am. more frequently, the women offered to share the entire training schedule. They now do everything the men do except for sentry duty.

One of those opposed to taking orders from the women is a full-bearded recruit who is a ritual slaughterer of animals in private life. The Bible says "men should rule women," he

Spiro Watch Operation Winds Down

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) - It seems that time has run out on the Spiro Agnew watch.

A family firm which co-pyrighted the watch stopped making it about four years ago. No more will be made.

In early 1976, Dr. and Mrs. Hale Dougherty and their 10 children hired a graduate art student to draw a caricature of the former vice-president of the United States. They copyrighted the design and were

Sand Dune Threat

sand dunes are moving across Egypt's western desert and will cover more than 280 miles of fertile Nile Valley farmland in 20 years unless something is done to stop them, says Farouk el Baz, an Egyptian-born American geol-ing dunes in on-the-spot stu-dies earlier this month. He also compared the topography shown in aerial photographs of the region taken in 1953 and that shown in pictures taken two years ago by the joint United States-Soviet space

The dunes, often 20 to 30 feet high, are closing in on Nile Valley between Cairo and Assiut, said El Baz, research director of the Smithsonian Instituation's National Air and space Museum in Washington.

The dunes are moving at average of 100 feet a year over the major part of western desert," he said.

"One has smothered a whole village in the Kharga Qasis there. Another is smack in the middle of a road built in 1963 leading to an adjacent serious population explosion, has only 65 square feet of farmland per person.

It now is confronted by an agricultural crisis because waterlogging has ruined 20 per cent of the arable land, and an additional 30,000 to 40,000 acres is lost annually to urban sprawl, Egyptian and American agronomists say.

Although the movement of the desert sands is well known to nomadic Bedouin tribesmen, its threat to Egypt's iarmland has been almost unnoticed by the auth-

"When a medium sand grain is blown "When a medium-sized sand grain is blown by a strong wind it talls back to earth like a bomb sending thousands of other particles in the wind's direction. Each falls back repeating the motion. Over days and months you almost come to believe the dunes are living things. the dunes are living things marching along and reproduc-ing as they go."

Egyptian agronomists say, the dune takeover can be overcome either by creating windbreaks—planting millions of trees to protect the fertile soil— or by planting special types of trees with huge roots that would fix the dune into place. El Baz said Algeria, which is faced with the same desert infringement of its farmland, is hoping to plant 20 billion trees in the next 20 years to

Feel of the Wind Helps Guide Sailor Who's Blind

TORONTO (CP) — Like hundreds of other weekend sailors, Stan King was hauling the canadian National Exhition and a how-toout navigation charts on a recent holiday weekend, unfurling the main sail and get-ting his sea legs back. The only difference is that he's only difference is that he's only difference is that he's doing it in the dark. King is blind, so is his first mate, his wife Shirley, and they Queen City Yacht Club on Alhave been sailing enthusiasts for four years.

turing of daffodil leaves as well as the broader leaves of the colchicums. These are all lying limp on the ground and becoming a little less than

The job of removing all these leaves has always come by the middle of June so it is by the middle of June so it is only a few days earlier. They have been left growing because of their value in food manufacture for the bulbs below. Now they are limp, their usefulness is over and we can get to work on them.

At this early stage, before the leaves are brittle dry, I find it best to cut off each find it best to cut off each group of leaves at soil level. Especially is this true with narcissus leaves for we don't want to damage the tops of the gulb scales where the fo-entering damaged areas, so it is easier to prevent this developing than to cure the condi-tion later.

As we cut the leaves from each group of bulbs we get a fresh view of the summer garden. The bulbs need not be lifted unless crowding was not ticed at flowering time; or if ticed at flowering time; or if flowers were small or scarce. Lifting will be necessary too if planning to redesign the garden for easier main-tainance. Spring flowering bulbs in one area together are less trouble after flowering than when scattered. With a suppoper shruh or two the summber shrub or two the bed is easy to care for. Daffodil bulbs or narcissis

(all daffodils are narcissi) store well in net or nylon bags, hung in an airy, cool and dry place. But first spread the bulbs to dry on from the bulb.

Plant the bulbs back into the soil by first of September. Name the groups as they are lifted and keep separated with their names throughout cleaning, storing and replanting.

Colehicums are called Fall
Crocus by some gardeners to the same family as the spring crocuses; colchicum is the family Lili aceae. The leaves of colchicums are now also limp and becoming yellow; the plants have a different life cycle to the nar-cissi. Their lovely lavender pink goblets were the joyous turning of the last Avgust surprise of the last August days, continuing well into the coolness of September.

Early in spring, leaves began to emerge where the fall. At first the dark green looks much like tulip leaves but they grew in width and length beyond anything belonging to a tulip.

The moving time for colchi-cum bulbs is in late summer — during August they have no roots and may be lifted carefully and replanted at once.

Mark their locations now if

New owners of established gardens are puzzled over these leaves if not already acquainted with the fall bloom-

By removing the maturing leaves from narcissus and colchicums now, the summer plants will present a better picture since they have less competition for air space. The bubbs will be quite seawn in

HOW TO WRITE A GOOD

CLASSIFIED ACTION AD

1-IT'S BEST to start your ad service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room etc., for rent, or property for sale: start your ad with the location.

2-BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably when given complete, definite information. Always include the price in your adveertisement.

3-MAKE IT EASY for the reader prospect to reach you. Always your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4-PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad apavailable to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5-PLACE YOURSELF In the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer

Crane Toppled After 'Gunshot'

inquest jury was told Thursday that the collapse of a construction crane that killed a man April 1 might have been prevented if a repair job had topped at the first sign of Dan McGuire, a mechanical engineer, testified Thursday that a sound like a gunshot was heard just prior to the collapse of the crane.

"I guess we could have saved it then if we'd gone no further," McGuire told the jury. "If I had suspected what the sound was — that it meant the mast (the central, tower-like structure of the stationary crane) was failing, I would have tried to stop it."

McGuire said he watched as job foreman Thomas (Tony) Rudnisky stood atop the jib, or boom, using a walkie-talkie radio to tell the mobile crane operator to increase the lift on the boom.

He said the first indication of trouble was the loud noise but no one at the site knew man ordered the hoisting to

There was only about a sec-ond to act before Tony or-dered the lifting to continue and "there was no reason to believe the noise meant a failure of the mast at that time," McGuire said.

A moment later the mast began to crumple and the structure crashed down on the building site, killing Rudnisky in a 175-foot fall and injuring five other men.

The inquest was told that Rudnisky himself had devised a plan whereby a loose cable on the big Kroll crane was to be tightened after a mobile crane pulled upward on the Kroll's jib to ease tension on the lines.

McGuire said he had acknowledged that he knew something was wrong with the crane's counterweights but it was a factor of about five percent and not significant.

cent and not significant.

Meanwhile, provincial for coroner Glen McDonald said he located by telephone an Ontario-based electrician named John McGowan, who had been at the top of the crane mast when it collapsed nd received relatively minor injuries in a fall of nearly 200

McDonald said McGowan McDonald sald McGowan told him that the Kroll crane had been owned by McGo-wan's employer, Macon Equipment Ltd. of Toronto, and that there had been prob-lems with its operation.

The inquest was adjourned to June 20. McDonald said this would give him time to make a written request for a full report on the accident by

PAYOFF PUZZLE

Correct Answers to Last Week's Puzzle

CLUES ACROSS:

6. SUPPLIED not supplies. It is the food SUPPLIED to the men for consumption that is cooked (more or less well). Food supplies, in the general sense of available stores, etc., are not immediately concerned with the question of how they are found to be cooked.

7. CORNET have some degree of affinity, as suggested.

(CORNET) have some degree of affinity, as suggested. The clue applies less aptly to a hornet since nobody is likely to compare the sound of a hornet, or consider its tonal character.

8. HANDED not landed. The clue says the man has been lucky (to a degree he may not realize); this favors "HANDED" — as if gratuitously — rather than "landed"

(as by his own merit.)

9. BULK not bull. "Mass" and "weight" are abstracts suitably linked with "BULK." A bull is simply an animal, it links up (indirectly) with the clue only by virtual in the bulk. tue of its BULK.

11. YARN not yard. YARN, as woven into "cloth," is very apt. A yard is a measure of very many things besides cloth.

14 SORE not sure. A "SORE loser" is an unadmirable type.
If, in the general run of "games," there is such a thing as a sure loser, one may admire his tenacity in continuing to seek his very first victory! 15. SOUR not four or your. SOUR links up most meaningfully with the clue's theme of unsatisfactory grapes. There seems little reason why you should "pursue" the question of four grapes; "yor," similarly, lacks any special 16 LEFT not lent. As the clue says, the man should be grateful for being LEFT money. Being lent money (e.g., at some rate of interest) doesn't necessarily merit

22. PLANTED not planned. As suggested, you PLANT the seedlings, etc., that are to become a colorful display. You plan an actual finished effect (not merely a would-be suc-

CLUES DOWN:

2. BURGLARY not burglars. BURGLARY is more immediately to the point, since what one is concerned about is the eventuality of BURGLARY (rather than thinking about the burglars as persons).

4. BLAND not blind. The policy in question implies, as suggested, a BLAND or agreeable attitude (through not necessarily BLAND agreement with everything). It does not imply any blindness. 5. REBEL not revel. The expression "feelings run high" refers to anger, etc., (REBEL) rather than enjoyable feelings (revel).

9. BASS not boss. The idea of someone "working with" a Bass (e.g., in a musical production) is quite apt, but one regards a boss—so labeled—as some to work for rather than "with." Also, the idea of needing to exercise "much patience" with one's boss, is uncharacteristic.

10. SALE not tale. There may well be specialized interest in fake paintings if put up for SALE. Regarding a tale (for which the subject of of art forgeries is not especially novel," anyhow), the interest arises from the quality rather than the subject.

12. BOXES not bones. Broken BOXES can be mended in an active sense. Broken bones can be set, or helped to ment of their own accord.

13. BRITISH not brutish. It is reasonable to speak of "typically BRITISH" character as the blue does. A brutish character is simply brutish (without question of typifying brutishness); also, the clue's attitude is unsuitably favorable where brutish is concerned.

17. WELL not cell. The clue suggests a "theme" as some sort of special idea for treatment. However, "in a cell" adds virtually nothing to the ordinary meaning of the word "imprisoned." "WELL" is a more pointed

INTERVIEW WITH MEIR

Golda Meir, an hour-long profile of the former Israeli prime minister, will be presented on Public TV 9, Monday, June 13 at 7:30 p.m. The portrait shows Mrs. Meir not only as a convinced and strong advocate of her country's struggle, but also as a witty, emotional and frank woman. In a comprehensive interview, Mrs. Meir discusses her youth; the events which have view, Mrs. Meir discusses her youth; the events which have influenced her politically, socially and emotionally; her difficult marriage; her relationship with her children; her career. In conversation with Mrs. Meir, and with her friends, family and colleagues, the strength of her personality and conviction becomes clear. As she states: "There are two things a Jew, and especially an Israeli, can't afford... that is Israeli, can't afford . . . that is to be tired, or to be pes-

I once had a teacher who was fond of remarking that "the chief contribution the United States has made to the world is the assembly line." Whether he was speaking lightly or literally I was never quite sure at the time, but as the years roll by, his remark begins to seem more true in a figurative sense than anything else.

Whatever the sense, his claim could hardly be applied to Canada, even by the sort of person who sails through life insisting that there is, indubitably, "no difference" between "us" and "them." (The cynic, mind you, might point out that Canadians have managed to refine the hewing of wood and the drawing of water to assembly line standards, but let's pay no attention to him. He's used to it.)

A recent book by Charles Taylor helps explain why. "It has become fashionable in recent years to deplore our British heritage," writes Taylor, "but even this steady denigration of our traditions is a back-handed tribute to their potency. It is not only that British pioneers and their descendants were largely responsible for the creation of Canada and are still dominant in our public affairs. It is also that British patterns became ingrained in our culture and have largely determined, for better or worse, the texture of our lives. Anyone who seeks to explore the deeper recesses of the Canadian spirit must eventually confront its basic Whatever their native talents, the British could scarcely be accused of a preoccupation with technical efficiency. (17) never forget a story I once read in The Times (London) which noted that British Rail was having trouble with condensation forming between the panes of their new double-glazed windows. The water had reached a depth of three or four inches when a passenger wrote in to suggest that a special breed of goldfish be developed to cope with the Taylor's book is titled Six Journeys: A Canadian Pattern, and it contains the biographies of six people whose lives, says Taylor, "for a long time . . . have grappled my imagination." They are Brigadier James Sutherland Brown, who was Canada's Director of Military Operations and Intelligence in the Department of National Defence between 1920 and 1927, and output of a streatogic plan for the Canadian in and 1927, and author of a strategic plan for the Canadian invasion of the U.S. which was to remain official policy for more than a decade; Bishop William White, who went to China as a gung-ho Anglican missionary in 1897, discovered "that the Chinese culture, far from being inferior to his own, was rich in opportunities for spiritual fulfilment" and went on to become curator of the ROM's Far Eastern collection, much of which he had purchased himself; James Houston, artist and writer whose enthusiasm for Eskimo art led to its development for the benefit of the Eskimo themselves; Herbert Norman, the historian-diplomat who made intellectuality into an art and who ran afoul of the U.S. Senate subcommittee on Internal Security; Emily Carr, who in her last great paintings dared "to fuse those two qualities which modern Canada so greatly fears: spirituality and true sensuality," and finally Scott Symons, who still seeks both to "explore and celebrate his dual heritage" of French and English and to discover a "new kind of man . . . who thinks at the end of his fingertips."

As Taylor's research progressed, he found a distinctive pattern emerging. In their lives and aspirations, his six characters in search of a biographer were the antithesis of the Canadian liberal who, like his American counterpart, believes that man is essentially free to shape his world ac cording to his own desires" and that "progress" and "material welfare," achieved through modern technology, are the "ultimate good."

Rather, his subjects shared the old Loyalist conviction

"that there was, in fact, a natural law which constrained man's freedom, which demanded and permitted both reverence and contemplation, and which offered a deeper, richer vision of man's spiritual potential.

Obviously, Taylor agrees. His book amounts to a conservative manifesto flung in the teeth of Canadian liberals who, since the days of Mackenzie King, have turned their backs on the British connection and scurried ingloriously after the Books like Taylor's are the real Opposition in this country. I found it more stimulating than anything since Herschel Hardin's A Nation Unaware. Taylor's thesis is stretched a little thin in places, particularly in the case of James Houston, but his insights are fresh and his research is impressive. By JULIAN REID

Worlds in Collision: Earth in Upheaval; Ages in Chaos — the very titles of Immanuel Velikovsky's past best-sellers have an apocalyptic ring. This air of lurid sensationalism is the key both to their widespread popular appeal and to the equally widespread anathemization they have provoked in academic circles.

Velikovsky has been hailed as prophet of a new intellectual era and dismissed as a sensationalizing charlatan; it seems virtually impossible to approach him with anything approaching true objectivity. Yet the publication of Peoples of the Sea, the long-promised sequel to 1952's Ages in Chaos, demands that we try.

Most of the dispute has centered on the literally earthshaking game of "cosmic bil-liards" which Velikovsky claims was played out during the last two millenia B.C. Planets hurling headlong from their orbits; Earth reeling on its axis; east and west sudden-ly reversing as the poles turned topsy-turvey — no wonder such notions have captivated the imagination of mil-

Yet these cosmological highjinks are merely a by-blow, Velikovsky's fumbling attempt to offer a pseudo-scientific rationale for his central thesis — that the Middle Kingdom of Egypt, along with a host of other ancient civilizations around the world, was according to the control of the overthrown by a gigantic catastrophe, of which the celebrated description in the Book of Exodus is an accurate historical account. It is this contention that is the startingpoint for Ages in Chaos and its

Just how shaky Velikovsky demonstrates in the lucidly-argued appendix which is the most valuable part of Peoples of the Sea.

'Late, Careless'

The basic framework for Egyptian chronology was supplied by Manetho, who composed his influential history about 280 B.C. Unfortunately, this work was, as the great Egyptologist James Breasted observed, "a late, careless and uncritical compilation," which has proved thoroughly unreliable wherever it can be checked against solid archeological evidence.

Manetho specified the sequence of Egyptian dynasties, but no actual dates; these were calculated astronomically on the basis of the so-called 'Sothic period," interpreted as referring to the cycle of "heliacal rsings of Sirius These calculations generated fortably short. On this dubious basis, more-or-less precise dates were assigned to the major events of Egyptian history, thereby enabling them to be synchronized with the established chronology of Greco-

But Velikovsky argues per-suasively that the "Sothic period" actually refers to the risings, not of Sirius, but of Venus. If he is right, the whole ierry-built structure of conventional chronology collapses thus clearing the way for Velikovsky's alternative version to stand or fall on its own

Imagine the confusion that would ensue if historians mistakenly treated the events of 20th century America as contemporaneous with those of 14th century Europe! If Velikovsky is right, it is just such a tangle that faces us when we come to the ancient Mediterranean

Retirement and pensions are as allied wills and death and, judging by a little poll I conducted among some of my younger friends and acquaintances, the average Canadian gives as much thought to the former as to the latter - which is precious little.

After all, what is there to worry about? At age 65 everyone receives the Old Age Security pension, which is indexed to the cost of living. Then there's the Canada Pension Plan, which is similarly indexed. Add to these company-funded pension plans and private investment in a Registered Retirement Savings Plan and Registered Retirement Savings Plan and the future looks rosy indeed.

Unfortunately, things are rarely what they seem and those who believe that, apart from runaway inflation, there is little to worry about are in for a rude shock when they read Pensions and Survival: The Coming Crisis of Money and Retirement, by Geoffrey N. Calvert, a futurist who is one of the world's most eminent ac-important book, for all of us are affected in greater or lesser degree, but younger people in particular will learn that the people in particular will learn that the policies regarding pensions being followed by the federal and most provincial govern-ments are jeopardizing their future and the future of their children.

As I understand it, the most significant point made by Calvert concerns pension funds for federal and most provincial civil servants. In company plans employers and employees contribute, thus making plans fully funded. And these funds, carefully invested, are making an enormous contribu-tion to the general economy of the Employees of the federal and most provincial governments are contributing to a pension scheme which they fondly believe is being contributed to by the various governments and that there is a nice fat fund sitting there accumulating

This, says Calvert, is not the case. Employee contributions are in fact going into general revenue and are being spent. Employers, in this case the governments concerned, are not making any contributions. There are no funds; reserves do no

One doesn't have to be a mathematical genius to realize that as the pension roll grows, and there being no reserves to meet increasing commitments, taxpayers are going to be squeezed still more. The main burden will fall on the shoulders of the younger members of the working force. And now we're into the realm of Today's young people of working age are the products of the post-war baby boom, but Canada has reached zero population growth and by the time today's younger people have reached retirement age there will be fewer working taxpayers to foot the ever-growing pension commit-ment. Clearly, Canadians are facing a crisis of monumental proportions.

Calvert's book, which is liberally spiced with charts and tables, spells out the danger for the man-in-the-street. Politicians know the score and are ignoring it. After all, they reason, they won't be in power when the blow falls so why should they court unpopularity; let their successors fall off that bridge when they come to

The impending crisis foreshadowed by a non-funded pension system for the growing army of bureaucrats; compounded by indexed pensions and pressures by unions for earlier retirement, should be viewed as only part of the mess. It appears that the Old Age Security/Guaranteed Income Supplement, as well as the Canada Pension Plan, are also not funded, or at least are only partially funded. All are being paid out of general revenue.

Surely, one asks, there must be some fund? Incredibly, there is not. The federal treasury, says Calvert, is not putting aside any reserves — is not itself contributing to these funds — and employee contributions are being loaned to provincial governments at a low rate of interest, somewhere around six per cent, and, believe it or not, the provincial govern-ments are spending this money (like they are spending the pension contributions of their own civil servants) and are actually borrowing more from Ottawa to pay interest on loans.

It is obvious that the two senior levels of government are creating a perilous situation for the next generation because if this lalsser faire attitude continues it means that fewer and fewer taxpayers will have to support more and more pen-

There have been suggestions that benefits from the Canada Pension Plan should be radically increased (one MP is talking about a sixty per cent increase) but Calvert warns sternly against this, explaining that this would mean a decrease in private funded plans which, because in the main they are properly managed, con-tribute substantially to the economy, making Canada less dependent on foreign inI have touched on only two subjects covered in this book — admittedly the most important — and it should be pointed out that Calvert has a lot to say about related subjects, all of it interesting, all of it pertinent.

I only have space to mention that he favors private plans over government plans, providing these are efficiently and fairly organized and pension are portable, and that he is enthusiastically in favor of Registered Retirement Savings Plans. Also, that he regards any lowering of the retirement age as dangerous and a man-datory retirement age as foolish.

He thinks that one day the pendulum will swing in the reverse direction and that retirement age will gradually creep up from sixty-five to sixty-six, sixtyseven, sixty-eight, and perhaps eventually to seventy, as it now is in Norway and Ireland. Apart from the sound economic angle, this conforms to Dr. Hans Selye's dictum that man must work ... work is a biological necessity.

Pensions and Survival is a very impor-tant book indeed and if ever senior govern-ments are pressured into putting their pension houses in order it will be thanks in large measure to Geoffrey Calvert for bringing this matter out in the open.

Because the ramifications of this subject are great and the complexities cause it to spill over into many areas, social as well as economic, I have tried to simplify it and in the process may have over-simplified it. I apologize publicly to Calvert for not doing justice to his book, and make amends by urging everyone to

Because I was so impressed by the importance and timeliness of this book, as well as by the qualifications of the author, I sought out Geoffrey Calvert with the object of clarifying my own thinking. He took time out from his incredibly heavy schedule to talk with me and I will share some of his observations with you in this space next week.

O'LEARY . . . energy, passion

His Book Less Than the Man

This is a difficult book to review because Grattan O'Leary was revered by politicians and journalists alike as a writer and speaker of no mean ability, as a connoisseur of good English and as an observer or a participant in Canadian politics for over 60 years. This book does not do him justice.

To begin with, he did not write it. The book was compiled by friends from interviews O'Leary gave to Tom Van Dusen and from a memoir he dictated to Norman Smith shortly before he died of cancer. As such the book violates O'Leary's own canon that the best prose is carefully constructed, reflecting not only its author's point of view but his craftsmanship as a writer as well.

From the occasional examples of in the book of O'Leary's writing as editor of the Ottawa Journal and of his speeches in the Senate — to which he was appointed in 1963 at age 75 — it is abundantly clear that this memoir is less than a tribute to its

It is disappointing as a record of his times for although O'Leary lived through some exciting moments in Canadian history, his recollections are little more than standard, brief accounts of such signal events as the King-Byng crisis of 1926 or the rise and fall of R.B. Bennett.

They add nothing to what we already know. It is not surprising that this is so, for O'Leary had neither the time nor, his difference of the production of the pro editor tells us, did he have the inclination to reflect on what he had dictated to revise it in any way or flesh it out with material from his files. There is consequently little that is new in the book.

By WALTER YOUNG

O'Leary was the last of the breed of determinedly partisan journalists. Like many of his generation he was a passionate believer and not a technocrat. A deeply committed Conservative, he made no attempt to hide his convictions, yet he remained equally committed to the view that as a reporter and editor he covered national politics fairly and well. Few of his colleagues ever denied that.

It was his conviction that gave his prose its energy and passion Today it would be unusual for a publisher to keep as his editor a man who regularly shared the public platform with the leader of one of our parties. Despite his open support of the Company his open support of the Conservatives, O'Leary's job was never in jeopardy.

In these memoirs, however, O'Leary seems to have missed the inconsistency of his own position. Throughout he is critical of the Liberals — Laurier being the one exception. He is particularly severe with Lester Pearson for "consulting regularly with his friends in the media," implying that Pearson owed more to his cultivation of journalists than to his own performance as prime minister. Apparently O'Leary forgot his own close association with Borden, Meighen, Drew and, to a less degree, Diefenbaker. He supported them as journalists, prepared memoranda and wrote speeches for them — it was O'Leary who drafted most of Diefenbaker's speech to the U.N. General Assembly — and the peroration was pure O'Leary. What was Grattan O'Leary if not a "friend in the media" to the Tory leaders?

His judgment of the usefulness of the Senate is also questionable although perhaps understandable. It gave him a platform and that was a positive function or he spoke wisely and well - but, regrettably, to a narrow audience. What O'Leary passes over-almost com-pletely is his work as chairman of the Royal Commission that investigated the periodical press in Canada. In this he made a major contribution, yet we learn little more than we did from the Commission. sion report itself. Had he the inclination or the time there was good deal he might have described about that particular part of his career.

Newspapers today are the product of business conglomerates. They strive to be "objectively right" or "objectively middle-of-the-road" and, of course, insist always that they are non-partisan. O'Leary said "we have destroyed our party press. Strong editorial comment is inseparable from party affiliation. Unless it is a party press it will not be a great press." By that he meant a paper and its editor must be openly partisan, accepting the impossibility of objectivity on the editorial page. That day has gone and with it the kind of journalism that made Grattan. O'Leary the kind of journalist he was.

His latest, English Humour, is just such a miscellany — wide-ranging, enthusiastic, individual, and sometimes provocative. As a book it is a problem for the reviewer.
